The late Mr. Vanderbilt, juring a visit to England, fell into the bands of a famous picture and bric-a-brac dealer, who thought his fortune was made when "the richest man in the world" entered his office and evidently "took fancy to him." The dealer yed Vanderbilt all the availant treasures of London, showed opened to him many interesting and historic doors, and after two weeks of luces-sant sight seeing "with business views," he sold "the richest man in the world" a table for $165 upon which the dealer made a commission of 25 per cent. Van-derbilt, when he came to London, always paid McHenry, the Philadelphia financier, a visit at his lovely home in Holland park. You have only to read clever and well-informed Berlin journal, the Krenz Zeitung, to understand this. Should Mr. Gladstone come into power this alliance will assuredly be antagonistic to England. Even with Lord Salisbury in office the alliance may not be very cordial in its relations with England. But it is well known that Lord Salisbury and the Conservatives have far more influence with Germany than the Liberals have. The Conserva-tives are at least respected by Russia, Germany, Austria and the rest of the powers. To be respected in that connection is to be feared, and to be feared is to be strong. Emerson was in England during an anxious and serious period of her history, and I hope I may be permitted to quote as possibly apropos of the present situation the last words of his touching and eloquent farewell to Manchester: gentlemen, I feel in regard to this aged England, with the possessions, honors and trophics, and also with the infirmities of a thousand years gathering around her, irretrievably committed as she is to many old customs, which cannot be suddenly changed; pressed upon by the transitions of trade, and new and all incalculable modes, fabrics, arts, mahines and competing populations. . I see her not dispirited, not weak, but well remembering that she has seen dark days before, indeed, with a kind of instinct that she sees a little better in a cloudy day, and that in storm of battle and bouse built for her at Chelsea.
